A plague of hares has been causing such chaos at Milan's city airport that authorities have decided to take drastic measures to try and catch them. Linate airport will close for three hours on Sunday while 200 wildlife experts go out on the runways to capture about 80 hares. Hares have been invading the runways for months, confusing the ground radar, and endangering aircraft landing and taking off, say officials. 'In the last two weeks hares have ended up beneath the wheels of two tourist charter planes,' said Alberto Grancini, the Milan province official in charge of hunting and wildlife. 'They could have caused serious accidents.'

The Milan airports authority said that the hare population at Linate had inexplicably increased this year leading to several attempts to drive them away from the airport. Unfortunately the hares have refused to leave, so the decision has been made to close the airport altogether to try to capture them.

The operation begins on Saturday, when an area of 4 square kilometres will be fenced off including the runways, hangars, and aircraft parking areas. The hare hunters will move in at dawn on Sunday, chasing hares until 8 am when Linate will reopen. Twelve flights will have to be rescheduled for later in the day. The hare will be taken to protected nature reserves in the Milan area and will be released, in the hope that they do not find their way back to the airport.
